From a Broken Relationship to Unconditional Self-Love ✨

When Prashant joined me, he was going through a difficult phase in his life. A broken relationship had deeply affected him, and he had stopped accepting and loving himself. This inner struggle was beginning to reflect across different areas of his life.

For a long time, he had also been trying to get his thesis accepted by a university, but despite his efforts, things simply weren't working out. The repeated rejections had left him frustrated and disheartened.

Our journey began with something much deeper than achieving an external goal—we worked on self-acceptance, self-worth and unconditional self-love.

As Prashant began changing the way he saw himself, his entire outlook started shifting. He moved from seeking validation outside himself to developing a stronger sense of acceptance and belief within.

And then came an incredible series of breakthroughs. ✨

The thesis he had struggled to get accepted for so long was eventually accepted by more than five universities, including international universities and two of India's top universities.

What made the journey even more remarkable was that one of the universities went a step further and offered him an opportunity to pursue his PhD with them.

His story beautifully demonstrates how powerful an inner transformation can feel when we stop rejecting ourselves and begin choosing ourselves.

✨ His biggest transformation:
He came in feeling broken, rejected and disconnected from himself. He walked out with a renewed sense of self-worth, unconditional self-love and opportunities that he had been struggling to create for years.